COUNTY DISPLAYS VERY ATTRACTIVE

Alfalfa and Corn Feature the Exhibits From More Than Fifty Counties.

The increase each year in the number of counties making displays at the State Fair has been very gratifying to the management as well as to T. O. Sanjour, State agent for the Department of Agriculture. The Department of Agriculture has been trying for years to interest the farmers in raising alfalfa and the various county exhibits at the Virginia State Fair will show that Virginia farmers are doing great things that need to be known.

There are probably ten more counties represented this year than last, and to accommodate these exhibits all partitions in the county exhibit building have been removed, throwing the entire structure into one large hall. The county exhibits will embrace everything from the farm and particular attention has been paid to the corn and alfalfa display, which is unusually large.

GIVE PROTECTION TO FAIR VISITORS

Chief of Police Werner Completes Arrangements for This Week, and Warns Public.

Chief of Police Werner was busy yesterday making final preparations for policing the Fair Grounds this week. All plain-clothes men, members of the bicycle squad and patrols to be designated will be on duty there each day in charge of Sergeant Holdcroft, of the First District, who will be assisted by Detective Bryant.

Patrons of the fair will be afforded further protection by Pinkerton detectives.

"As a protection to themselves," said Major Werner last night, "visitors to the fair should leave their valuables at their homes or hotels, and take with them just the amount of money they intend to spend."

"Wherever you find a crowd, you will find crooks, and each year this show attracts some of the cleverest pickpockets in the country. We do our best to 'spot' them as soon as they arrive in town, and order them out before they have a chance to begin operations. But though the best precautions are taken, there are some good thieves who land and fleece the visitors. That's why I warn the public to leave its valuables at home when visiting the fair."
